Important News from the Show-Me-State

Live CME No Longer Required for AAFP Membership

In the latest move to adapt to family physicians' evolving needs, the American Academy of Family Physicians has eliminated the requirement for active members to earn 25 credits of continuing medical education (CME) through live activities. The change will allow active members to pick the learning formats that best suit their needs and preferences.

Although members value live meetings, the switch from traditional in-person events to virtual offerings during the pandemic has blurred the line between live and enduring activities. The new change will eliminate confusion about how to report in-person CME activity that has transitioned to other formats, such as virtual, live stream, recordings, and on-demand. For more information, visit the AAFP website.

Missouri Hospital Association (MHA) Dashboard on Health Equity

The MHA released a new tool to help hospitals and other health equity stakeholders identify health and social disparities within hyperlocal areas in Missouri. The suite of four health equity-focused dashboards offers previously unavailable granularity in health outcomes, health factors and social determinants of health for finite population segments and geographic areas in Missouri. The dashboards are designed to use in addressing disparities in care, outcomes, and the clinical and nonclinical factors that relate to individual and community health. Access the dashboards here.
